

"Ah, my beloved Jesus, tell me: what more is there left for Thee to invent in order to make Thyself loved? And shall I, then, continue to live so ungrateful to Thee as I have hitherto done? Thou did not disdain that I should receive Thee in Holy Communion, grant that my soul always live the true life of Thy grace."

Only the Holy Spirit grants true harmony. The harmony which bound together the Church's first Christians, Pope Francis pointed out, "came as a gift of the Holy Spirit," and was not 'man-made' nor a contrived form of tranquil coexistence. We can negotiate some sort of peace ... but harmony is an inner grace that only the Holy Spirit can grant," the Pope said, stressing the first Christian community illustrated this. When a community is united in Christ, the Pontiff underscored, it is courageous.

When there is no one wanting, the Argentine Pope noted, this is a sign of harmony. "In what sense?" he asked. "They had one heart, one soul, and no one considered as his own any property that belonged to him, but everything was shared in common amongst them. None of them was ever in need. The true 'harmony' of the Holy Spirit has a very strong relationship with money: money is the enemy of harmony; money is selfish." The fact that the first Christian community freely gave their own goods "so that others would not be in need" evidenced its harmony.

Warning against confusing "harmony" with "tranquility," the Pope stressed that a community can seem tranquil, but it is not necessarily harmonious. "I once heard a wise thing from a bishop: 'There is tranquility in the diocese. But if you touch on a certain problem – this problem or that problem – war breaks out.' This is negotiated harmony, and this is not of the Spirit."
